Sketch my story

Student A

A crazy thing happened last week. I got into my kayak as I like spending time on the river. I was enjoying myself, paddling along easily. It was cloudy and the wind was blowing gently through the trees along the river bank. Suddenly, I noticed something unusual. I saw a young man, a teenager, on a raft. He didn't seem able to paddle it very well, and I was worried about him because, just ahead, there was a waterfall. It wasn't a very big one, but I knew the raft would turn over. 'Are you OK?' I called out loudly to the boy. He just looked at me, frightened. The water was flowing more quickly now, and he couldn't control the raft. I immediately decided to block him with my kayak and push him to the river bank. It was hard work but I got him there safely. So much for a relaxing day on the river!

A scary thing happened last week. I'd planned to go windsurfing with my friends but they all cancelled at the last minute. I desperately wanted to windsurf that day, so I decided to go by myself. I'm just a beginner, but I'm slowly getting better at it. When I got to the beach, no one was around, just some sea birds sitting quietly on the rocks. I got my board ready and got into the water. I fell a few times, but that's normal. The sun was shining brightly, and soon I was having a great time! So I was coming back to the beach at great speed when, suddenly, I noticed something near the shore. It was a breathing tube ... I realized someone was snorkelling, and I was going too fast to stop! Luckily the snorkeller saw me and moved just in time. 'Watch where you're going!' she shouted angrily. I was so embarrassed.
